A Midwife's Dedication

Each month, a special group of women and men gather at the clinic in Baraderes, a rural community about three hours from the closest major city, Les Cayes. During the meeting, almost 100 midwives greet each other with prayer, record the number of births they attended, and participate in a health lesson. For their work in the community, the midwives (including 5 men!) receive 100 Haitian gourdes, which is equivalent to just under $2. Hope for Haiti supplements the clinic with pre-natal and post-natal vitamins, children's multi-vitamins and birthing kits packed with love by volunteers in Naples, FL.

Many of the older community members have been midwives for the majority of their lives.

"I've been a midwife for 30 years," notes one of the experienced midwives who walks 2-3 hours to get to the clinic. She can't remember how many mothers and babies she has helped over the years, but imagines it is more than 300! Mother to mother, many of the women have even helped their own children give birth.

"I enjoy being a midwife to help mothers stay healthy during pregnancy and deliver their babies safely," which she has been doing for the past 25 years.
