Celebrate Earth Day by Providing a Seedling to a Rural Community

This year, Hope for Haiti is celebrating Earth Day with students, parents and community members at two rural schools. On May 1st, Haiti's "Fèt Agrikilti" or Agricultural Day, Hope for Haiti will conclude our reforestation program for the 2011-12 school year through the distribution of seedlings to students and community members. Thanks to you, we successfully reached our goal of growing over 25,000 seedlings!

Hope for Haiti Agronomist Pierre Francois with students.

On May 1st, each student will receive five seedlings to take home and plant. The seedlings, including breadfruit, orange, grapefruit, lime, coffee and cassia, will provide nourishment to the students' families and protection for the local environment.

Throughout the year, Hope for Haiti staff

Seedlings are sprouting!

Agronomists taught the students how to tend to a seedling nursery and how to care for the seedlings once they're taken home. Now, Hope for Haiti will spend the summer months monitoring the students' seedlings and see the fruits of much hard labor pay off!

Next year, Hope for Haiti will work on perfecting its current school-based reforestation program so that we can expand to include other communities in the program. Many other communities in Haiti are on the verge of environmental devastation due to rampant deforestation. These communities can benefit greatly from a reforestation project. On this Earth Day please think of these communities and the potential for change.

For only $1 USD you can help Hope for Haiti bring a seedling to a rural community in need.
