Vitamin Angels Visit Hope for Haiti Programs

November 2009

Over the last several months,
our partnership
with Vitamin Angels has provided a $4.5 million supply of Vitamin A supplements and prenatal vitamins to support our network of schools, nutrition clinics, and healthcare facilities.

Now at Hope for Haiti we are putting that contribution into action.*

This week our Haiti staff teamed up with Vitamin Angels founder and president, Howard Schiffer, program coordinator Amy Steets, Sharon Dressen of the health products supplier, Rainbow Light, and photographer Matt Dayka, to deliver high-dosage Vitamin A supplements to children under five, the most vulnerable age group, in some of our most difficult to access program sites. The team trekked by truck and on foot for many miles and hours across the Haitian countryside, working with schools and clinics where their products are helping decrease the malnutrition and infant mortality that afflict so many Haitian children.

With Vitamin Angels' support, we have a plan.
And our recent excursion with their team was just the first step. In all of our supported schools, we will deliver Vitamin A to children under five, a nutrient essential to a child's survival in the first years of life, and distribute de-worming medication to students of all ages. We will educate teachers about the transformative effects Vitamin A can have on their students' health. We will translate public health materials into Creole so that they're culturally sensitive and easy to understand. Finally, we'll continue our practice of integrating programs to compliment one another, because we want children to do more than just show up to school. With our programs ensuring not only a quality education but improved nutrition and better health, they can.

We extend a huge thanks to Vitamin Angels for their motivation, energy, and generosity. With their products, we have the supplies to reach our new goal. And with your support, we can surely get there.
