Fontus on the far right

Like most teenagers his age, 17-year-old Fontus Reguelio likes sports, especially watching his favorite soccer team Real Madrid. His family doesn't have a television, but he is still able to listen to the games on the radio. Reguelio also really likes school and his favorite subject is math. "I want to be an engineer when I grow up!" Yet living in the remote Haitian mountains, Reguelio has always been just a step away from education.

When Reguelio finished elementary school he thought he wouldn't be able to continue schooling because his school didn't offer all of the grade levels, That's when he found a Hope for Haiti supported school that offered the grade levels he needed- now completing school is now a reality for Reguelio. Attending a Hope for Haiti sponsored school doesn't just mean that Reguelio has a classroom to sit in, but he is learning from qualified teachers, participates in a school lunch program, and is welcome to participate in recreational activities- like viewing the 2014 World Cup at the school! But most important, it means that Reguelio is able to stay on the right track to achieving his academic and professional goals. Help kids like Reguelio stay in school with a donation today!
